

Four Island Initiatives Receive Building Healthier Communities Grants

Tuesday-September 12, 2017 – Vancouver Island & the Gulf Islands: As part of our Building Healthier Communities Fund (BHCF), Coastal Community is proud to announce funding for community projects from Cowichan Therapeutic Riding Association, Victoria Youth Paddling Club Society, Alberni Valley Transition Society and LUSH Valley Food Action Society. These four projects exemplify BHCF's criteria of sustainability, support for a broad range of people, and visible and meaningful impact in one of our local communities.

BHCF has provided hundreds of thousands of dollars in seed money to activate dozens of local organizations with long-term initiatives that contribute to building healthier Island communities. Cowichan Therapeutic Riding Association joins the list with a grant of $5,500 to purchase a trailer to turn into a mobile tack store kiosk. The expanded economic potential will help support the association's equine-based wellness programs for children and youth with special needs.

Victoria Youth Paddling Society also enriches the lives of our Island's younger set. The registered non-profit society is dedicated to offering safe, affordable and fun water sports for Island youth ages nine and up, so every youngster can experience the benefits of a lifetime of paddling. The club receives $4,000 to purchase new float for replacement docks, followed by the installation of the docks and new storage sheds.

The Alberni Valley Transition Town Society will put its grant of $4,000 toward the production of a cycling map for the area. The project will educate local young riders by providing the safest routes and bicycle safety tips, while encouraging all ages to grab a bike and hit the streets. The Society's goal is to help make Port Alberni a more liveable, people-centered community.

Finally, the Courtney-based LUSH Valley Food Action Society will use its $3,520 grant to support its Healthy Food Programs. The association offers a series of workshops and food services, many focusing on youth, which educates people on the importance of healthy and if possible locally-sourced food. The environmentally-focused organization celebrates how central the sharing of good food is to community well-being.

"Each of these organizations shares our vision of social responsibility, leadership and building healthy vibrant communities," said Allyson Prescesky, Manager, Community Experience and Communications with Coastal Community Credit Union. "We are inspired by their passion to enrich the lives of our young people, many of whom are among our communities' most vulnerable members."
